"TOO THIN."

The Expression not Necessarily Slangy Good Authority for Its Use.

Though the phrase "too thin" as ordinarily used by school boys and others, may now be styled vulgar, the words may be used in a perfectly orthodox manner. "Thin" is equivalent to "transparent." easily seen through, and, as a metaphor, seems to involve the idea of a veil (such as the ancients call rentus textitis, or "woren wind") which served to display as much as to conocal the person.
It is in this sense evidently that Shakespeare used the words in "King Henry VIII," act V., s. 2, where the king says: ... You were ever good at sudden commendations, Bishop Winchester. But know I come not To hear such flattery now; and in

They are too thin and bare to hide

That is "your commendations are too transparent to hide your offenses."

Another instance of the use of the words may be found in Smollett's novel of "Peregrine Pickie," published in 1751.

When the hero suddenly informs his lady-love, Amelia, that he is going abroad, the tears gushed into her eyes, and she was at great pains to concel the cause of was at great pains to conceal the cause of her grief by observing that the tea was so scalding hot as to make her eyes water. "This pretext," says Smollet, "was too thin to impose on her lover, or to deceive the observation of her friend Sophy."

There is nothing vulgar in saying that appetent is "too thin," and this is what is meant by the modern elliptical phrase

THE PLATFORM.

The Republicans of Washoe, proud of the past and hopeful for the future, heartily endorse the platform and nominees of the National Republican Convention, as adopted at Chicago, and the Republican State Convention at Winnemucca, and pledgea rousing majority for Harrison and Morton and Frotection, and Murphy and Bartine and the ticket naminated by this Convention. We demand legislation from both Government and State in regard to irrigation, and for the improvement of our natural waterways, as well as for the storage of water, whereby the natural advantages of this section can be improved to their fullest capacity. We demand the most rigid economy means and County affairs, and the establishment of the State's expenses upon such a basis as will secure good government at the lowest rate of taxation. We maintain that a rate of seventy-five cents should be and is sufficient to provide revenue for the State Government.

In view of, the rejection of the new Chinese treaty by the Mongolian Government we demand the total and absolute exclusion of all Chinese, and they must go.

THE following from the Eastern Morning News, an English paper, correctly states the President's position on the tariff question: President Cleveland's manifesto on fiscal reform will not make the po-sition of the Democratic party very much more intelligible to English readers. There is a good deal of Mr. Facing-Both-Ways about the President's recent deliverances. Mr. Cleveland would of copper and iron ore from north-have his free trade supporters un-ern Michigan, also a unique cane. south of the Union and Central Paderstand that he is for free trade, and his protectionist supporters that he is not against protection, "We have entered upon no freetrade crusade," says this latest address; "abrupt radical changes are not intended." Well, the terminology of the movement matters comparatively little. So long as President Cleveland adheres to his programme of freeing imported interest, of which this meeting is raw materials, outsiders will credit only one. SAN BUENAVENTURA, Cal., Oct. 4. Last night the Ventura Republicans ratified the action of the Republican Senators and Congressmen in passing the Scott Exclusion bill by a monster parade of the Harrison Flambeau Club and citizens of the Republican Club through the principal streets. Two hundred and fifty men were in line, and a ringing speech by W. H. L. Barnes, showing that the passage of the Exclusion bill was due to Republicans and not to Democrats was enthusiastically received. The Republicans are jubilant.

THE SINEWS OF WAR.

Contributions to the Dem Campaign Fund.
The New York Sun (Democratic) of

he 26th ult, contained the following: When President Cleveland gave his magnificent contribution of $10,000 to the funds of the Democratic Campaign Committee, he was not alone in that work of national beneficence.

At the same time with the Presi dent's check the committee received a check for $10,000 from the Hon Thomas F. Bayard; a check for $10, 000 from the Hon. Charles S. Fair child; a check for $10,000 from the Hon. William C. Whitney; a check for $10 000 from the Hon. Don M. Dickinson; in all, from the President and Cabinet, the handsome sum of $50,000. But three members of the cabinet, Secretary Endicott, Secretary Vilas and the Pan-Flectric Attorney-General gave nothing General, gave nothing.

However, to make good every deficiency, the Hon. William L. Scott of Pennsylvania gave $20,000; Sidney T. Fairchild, Secretary Fairchild's father, and J. J. Hill, the Democratic hustler of Minnesota, gave $10,000 apiece; the Pavnes of Cleveland gave liberally, and other personal friends of President Cleveland clubbed in, swelling the aggregate contributions to the impressive total of $150,000.

total of $150,000.

Thus President Cleveland, with four members of his Cabinet and his personal friends, has richly man his interest in the success of the De-mocracy in this election. Other conmocracy in this election. Other con-tributions, and very handsome ones, have been made by Democrats in dif-ferent stations, but the gifts of the President and the Cabinet are as dis-tinct as they are laudable. There can no longer be a question that they are all offensive partisans, and that the victory of the Democracy lies near their hearts.

Let the good work go on! Let the gifts of patriotism to the Democratic campaign be grand and abundant!

A PEACH DESTROYER.

An Arizona Beetle Which is Prov. ing Troubleson

The Florence, A. T., Enterprise says: It has been observed for several years that the ripening peaches in this valley have been attacked each year by some insect that devoured the mellow side of the fruit to the pit and thereby destroyed it for all uses, but the exact nature of the enemy was not discovered until quite recently. H. G. Ballou has given the subject his careful attention and finds that the depre dator is a rare species of beetle, not mentioned in the standard works of entomology, and, although the destroyer is now fully identified, its habits are yet almost unknown. An old treatise describes an analagous in-sect in the Carolinas, called the Brilsect in the Carolinas, called the Brilliant Allharina, and it also speaks incidentally of its closely related species, the Changeable Allharina, the predatory beetle of this valley, of which it gives very little information further than a clue of its identification. In this valley it appears after the first summer rains, apparently from the low, moist lands, and immediately seeks the peach orchard, where it selects the choicest fruits and ruins them. In case there are no ripening them. In case there are no ripening peaches it feeds upon grapes and even upon the growing cornstalks, evidently seeking the recurrine juices of the fruit or plant. It disappears during an indescribable changeable color, an indescribable changeable color, quite unlike the cottonwood species. When they are plentiful several will attack a ripe peach stimultaneously and devour all its mellow portion in a few hours.

Cared With Arsenie

The Visalia, Cal., Times says: G. W. Francis, who is a large raiser hogs in the foothills, has had a deal of hogs in the foothills, has had a deal of trouble on account of a disease known as "kidney worm" breaking out among his porkers. One seemed very badly afflicted, and as Mr. Francis knew that death was inevitable, he gave the hog a dose of strychnine, about as much as could be placed on the end of his knife blade. Imagine his astonishment when the pig looked grateful, turned around and resumed his customary avocation of indulging in a square meal. Mr. Francis has tried the strychnine on many of his hogs and finds it very successful.

Caught at Truckee.

The Truckee Republican of the 3d nstant says: For several days past young man, calling himself H. H. McCord, has been taking orders from Reno, Carson and Virginia business men for safes, representing himself as the agent of a well-known San Francisco firm. At five o'clock last evening he hired George Hymers, the well-known Reno liveryman, to bring him to Truckee, They arrived here at half past ten, and hadn't got the dust of the journey out of their eyes when Constable Reed arrested McCord for embezzlement, on a telegram sent by Constable Upson of Reno. When arrested McCord had $1,161 in his possession. The San Francisco firm he claimed to represent had telegraphed Constable Upson that he was an imposter, and a Reno victim swore out a warrant for his arrest. Upson arrived cisco firm. At five o'clock last evening warrant for his arrest. Upson arrived on last night's passenger and this morning returned to Reno with Mc-Cord and his boodle.

An Arctic Circle Railroad.

An important engineering enterprise now in progress is a railroad in the Arctic Circle. The Swedish and Nor-Arctic Circle. The Swedish and Norwegian railroad now being built from Luies, on the Gulf of Bothnia, to Luffoden on the North Sea, is partially situated within the Arctic Circle, and is some 1,200 miles further north than any railroad in Canada: An interesting meteorological fact stated in relation to this work is that the snowfall is found to be actually less than in some more southern latitudes, while the darkness of the long winter nights has been partly compensated by the has been partly compensated by the light of the aurora. The object in view in constructing this line is to tap the enormous deposits of iron ore in the Gellivara Mountains, the approximate exhaustion of the ore in the Bilbao district rendering year desirable a pay. triet rendering very desirable a new field of non-phosphoric ore suitable for steel rail making.

Railread Building.

The San Francisco Bulletin says The operations of a full and wellequipped corps of railroad surveyors in the passes of Plumas county tend to confirm reports which have been cur-rent for the last two years of the de-signs of the Union Pacific to secure a through line to San Francisco from a point on its Oregon Short Line. It also agrees with general statements recently made by prominent railroad men that a great development of railroad building is imminent in Northern California. In the southern part of the State the two rival roads have covered the country with a network of Clearly Stated.

A Gilroy Gazette says: The fig grower, the manufacturer of olive oil, the borax producer and the wool men of the State are always delighted to hear that the average reduction made by the Mills tariff bill is only seven per cent. They know that it is 100 per cent. on their industries, but of course the seven per cent. average must be very consoling. If a man loses by death his wife and five children, it comforts him dreadfully to known that the average death rate is less than one Severely Scalded.

The Truckee Republican says: At Schaffer's sawmill Monday George Schaffer, Jr., and another man were carrying a boiler full of boiling water. The handle which George had hold of cuddenly came off and some of the boiling water ran into his right shoe and badly scalded his right ankle and and badly scattered his right ankie and foot. To make the matter worse the hot water dissolved the dye stuff in his sock, and blood poisoning from that cause is apprehended. George will be confined to his house for several weeks.

The Sacramento Record-Union possible for the following: One day last week a man stepped into the Internal Revenue Office and, laying down two dollars on the counter, asked for a license. The deputy, Mr. Cravens, took down the certificate book and asked: "At what time will you ommence business?"

The man colored up, looked very indignant, and replied: "I don't know as that is necessary for me to state, and furthermore, I don't think it is any of your business."

The deputy tried to reason with the applicant, stating that the date of commencing business must be put in the

The young man became quite wrathy, and refused to give the date.

Just as he was about to leave the office in high dudgeon the Collector, Mr. Barnett, came in and inquired what was the matter.

Mr. Cravens explained, and said the matters are reserved to like the formula of the content of th entieman peremptorily refused, for ome unexplained reason, to give the ate when he proposed to commence business.

Mr. Barnett tried to reason with the stranger, when the latter blurted out: "How in — can I tell when I am going to commence business when I ain't married yet."

"Oh! I see! said the Collector. "You want a marriage license, Well, you have come to the wrong place. You must go to the County Clerk, and he will not ask you such seemingly impertinent questions."

The young man, with a blushing damsel upon his arm, was seen wending his way to the Court house a few moments later. He was there granted a license to enter upon a new business, at any date to suit his own sweet pleasure, and no questions asked. ure, and no questions asked.

A Sheep Shearing Machine. The process of sheep shearing by machinery is now performed in Australia by an ingenious kind of device the results, as represented, being very satisfactory. The apparatus in question is a very simple one, being made on the same principle as the cutter of a mower or reaper, and the knives are worked by means of rods within the handles, these in their turn being moved by a core within a long, flexible tube, which is kept in a rotary shaft, and wheels driven by a stationary en-gine. The comb is in the form of a segment of a circle about three inches in diameter, with eleven conical-shaped teeth. Each machine is worked by a shearer, and as the comb is forced along the skin of the animal the fleece is cut. The machine can be run either with story or worker or the additional to the skin of the animal the fleece is cut. " BON GARCON."

There is a little corner in Southern Italy where Arcady still lingers. Once I was in the habit of spending every spring there, but I shall never go again. Yet it is to me the most beautiful place in the

One lands at the Marina and climbs the fill winding up, up, up the long white high road, which is like a shelf along the edge of the cliff.

High above one's head hangs the mountain, leaning forward stark and grim; below the wall of the road the ground falls sheer away to the sea. One sees nothing but the great shining plain and the threatening mountain. Round and round curves the road be tween those two stient watching enemies, till suddenly, without warning, one reacles the plateau and comes out in a land of desire.

It is only to climb a wall and then to walk onward without let or hindrance through the wheat fields under the clives, where the young green wheat blades are like swords for keenness, and their color rtrikes on the soul like a song too sweet for words, and yet brave withal.

And below the wheat on the lower ter-races are the beaufields, sweat and heavy, where a man may lie full length on the short grass of the thread-like path, feel nothing but the warm odors, the little winds over the blessoms, be conscious of nothing but the glory of the wheat, the flickering shades of the gnarled olives in the afternoon light, and if he lies still enough the sound of the nightingale learning its song.

And yet he may be sick at heart!
As I the lay there the livelong Aprilday, neithe reading nor thinking, nor grateful to God for His wind and His beanfields, but with my fingers in my ears to shut out the sound of the nightingale who sang loud, so loud!

For, instead of the young spring tide, I saw nothing but a woman, standing as first I saw her, dressed in white from head to foot, with bare arms and shoulders, a wreath of brown winter ivy round ber golden head and a great garland of it

There she stood and looked me in the eyes, with a straight grave glance. Not the look she gave men as a rule; I found that out soon enough, for if ever there was a woman coquette, seduisante (my English is not good at best, it leaves me always when I talk of her), it was she

I used to watch her often as she talked to men with that quick grace she had, and being used to analyzing faces—it is my profession for that matter, I who am a doctor—I saw that she, whom most women hated for her lovers, whom most men adored and thought a soft warm plaything, une, wraic femme, was in reality as cold as a stone image.

It was a very pretty play which went on around her, with often a change in the jeune premier, but she did not act in it

She piped carelessly and all her court danced, but she grew neither warm nor weary. I am not very sure how I came to be so friendly with her; I think she began

I would not have presumed.

But we fell into a way of walking over the hills together and sitting on the clifs in the noon days, looking out over a sea like the glory of God for light and color; talking of many things sometimes, sometimes quite si'ent, lying in the sun; I with my hat o er my eyes, drinking in the seents of the spring air, just seeing the splender of a bush of yellow broom standing out against a violet sea; she with her head flung back on the short dry grasses, often enough a cigarette in

As the days went by we grew quietly nearer one another, insensibly, till one morning I asked her something.

The fact was, all the place was ringing with her doings. The men with whom she had amused herself for a time, not all being gentlemen, handled her name in the cafes without too much courtesy. And the women had always hated her for her beauty, her toilets, her artistic renutation; young as she was, she had had a mention at the Salon.

So I asked her if it really amused her sufficiently to be worth the price

She shook her head.

When she was not painting she grew horribly ennuyee; she must do something. And then it was not all her fault,

"It is to a great extent," I told her. "You lead men on horribly (not me-ce n'est pas la peine-but most men). As soon as they make love to you they disgust yon, repel you; you fling them over none too gently, and, well-enfin, they

She nodded. I fancy she knew quite well what sort of reputation she had. But presently she said with amusement:

"So you do not care about me-you?"
"I like you so much that I do not like them to speak of you as they do. You are always bon garcon to me." I cried, turning sharply on her; "why cannot you translate it literally and be a 'good boy' always? Drop your coquetry, take life frankly; you would do better."

She did not answer. The sun was hot, she began to look tired and said she had work to do, she must go home. I thought she did not like what I had said. But I walked to her villa with her, and as I stood in the logria and bade her good bye, she put her hand into mine. And something prompting me, I said

And something prompting me, I said very low:

"Be a good boy!"

She looked me in the face.

"I will," she said as though she were making a vow.

And she did, I know, for I never again saw in her that light manner which I had always distinct. I never heard her talking to men as I had heard her often analysis.

And we were rather more together than ever. She would not let me treat her as a woman; indeed, she was the only woman I ever knew who was; a fond, bon garcon—who knew the meaning of cam-ion to her was getting all ami," I said to her; and in my soul I called her "Ma rose blonde, ma cherie."

I made up my mind to go away; it was all I could do. She knew nothing about my wife, and of course I knew I must tell her.

So one very windy implement day, as we were sitting in a little sheltered cove on the shore, I "screwed my courage to the sticking place" and told her I must go to Rome.

I had had a very thresome letter and was out of tune, like the day, and I did not say it n'cely.

Why do you go?" she asked, looking at hie where she sat, close against the ofernal rock, the glorious strong selectabling and forming at her very feet.

I threw a stone into the water and valued to see where it fell. Then I said

"Certainly not; since you are well enough to go back to your work," she assented (for I go to my Arcady because I do not sleep in Rome). Yet I knew she had understood me.

She threw a stone into the incoming wave in her turn, then she spoke slowly and carefully:

"Are you going back to your wife?" she

"Who told you?" said I, not having voice "The princess, I think. The morning you came into the studio and she was I seldom entered Suzon's house. One morning I had gone to ask her about pho-tographing a picture, I remembered, and Princess Mathilde was there,

"What did she say?" I asked.
"Precisely? She said what a very handsome man you were, and what a sad story yours was.' "Ah!" I said stupidly.

"Where is your wife!" Suzon spoke with careful civility. "I suppose you will join her in Rome!"
"My wife, mademoiselle, is, or rather was, in a maison de sante. She suffere

"I beg your pardon!" said my comrade softly, and held out her hand to me. I took it as it was offered and let it go

She did not ask me any more, nor did I tell her. Of what use was it to say that three times had that woman tried to murder me when crazed by drink, till her own people had had her shut up? Or why should I say to my bon garcon that I had only that day received a letter from the doctor at the asylum telling me that my wife had escaped, and he did not know where she was: could I tell him of any haunt in which she was likely to be found?

I saw no sense in telling all this to Su-tion. When a man at the age of 23 marries a woman thirteen years older, and finds out soon after, that besides being addicted to drinking she is of unsound mind and makes pleasing attempts to murder him, she and her doings are not a sabject on which he is likely to dwell.

So I held my tongue. I never thought she could find me out in my pleasant land, though she had been there once with me long ago. I never thought that in her mad hatred she would remember how I invariably spent the spring months there after my winter's work. But I fancied I should find her in "What are you going to do?" I asked

Suzon.
"Work," she said quietly. She never spoke of it, but I knew she painted for her bread, and that she had no idea of saving money but lived from hand to mouth. So I was anxious about her. I could not trust myself to think about it. I would keep au courant with her doings; that was all I could do for her, though I knew she was horribly poor, and the life of a beautiful woman in Paris is not easy in that case.
"We will have one more walk before I go," I said to Suzon, and she said "Yes."

So the next day we walked up the terraced high road, up a:d up till we reached the olives and the wheat, and then the beanfields, and, wandering on at our own sweet will, were happy and inno

We sat down at last on the long grass at the edge of the cliff overhanging the sea, where a little wind came up to us. We did not speak of its being our last day, we talked as usual, comrade to comrade, while a nightingale somewhere about kept trying his voice in broken

It was like heaven. I lay on the grass; Suzon, not far off, read Leopardi aloud. Why she chose that hilosophie de desespoir, she who had still la joie de vivre, I do not know. But presently I ceased to hear her voice.

I do not sleep at night, and, like all people who have insomnia, am utterly unable sometimes to keep from falling into a deep sleep, especially in the open

And so I did that day. And while I slept that woman must have been creeping on to us. For I started, dazed, from my sleep to see Suzon struggling in the grasp of a mad woman on the very verge of the cliff!
Of course I knew who it was. I was on my feet like a flash, but not in time; for before I could reach her I saw my comrade flung out over that awful height!

And then two men who had been workand the fields camerunning and caught my wife. I did not wait to hear them tell how they had seen her creep up to me, not seeing I was not alone; how, just as she held the kuife at my back, Suzon had leaped like a cat and caught ft from her hand, and how that she devil had turned on her.

hand, and how that she devil had turned on her.

All that I heard afterward. Now I ran down that zigzig path to the shore and knelt by my little comrade!

I thought she was dead for nearly every bone in her body was broken and her eyes were closed in stupor. I groped for her heart with my hand (I who had never touched her). She was alive, for II-R it stir, and then she opened her eyes and looked at me.

She knew me, but she did not, I think, remember where she was or what had happened. The poor lips tried to speak and failed.

"Try again, my darling, ma cherie!" I and failed.

"Try again, my darling, ma cheriel" I cried. "Tell me, are you in pain?" Though I did not think she was, for her back was broken.

"S'y it again," she whispered.

"What?" I wondered. In despair I called her by every name I had for her and had never used except to my own soul.

"Ma cherie, ma rose blonde, mon

"Ma cherie, ma rose blonde, mon amour."

"What you said—I was always—to you!" she gasped fretfully.

"Mon e manade, mon bon garcon," I said, hard y able to get out the words.

"Bon gur—" the murmur died in her throat and her eyes closed. Presently I could no longer feel her heart.

And when I knew she was dead I took her in my arms and carried her up to the little plateau, full of wondering peasants where the gendarmes were taking away my wife. But I did not see them; I went straight to her house, even to that chamber where I had never thought to enter, and laid her on her bed.

I never kissed her. I was her comrade, not her lover.

It is two years since then.

My wife is shut up once more, safely watched now that it does not matter.

I am at my work. Sometimes I am so tired that I can hardly undress at night, too tired to sleep.

But tais spring I longed so for my old Aready that I came in spite of myself. It is all the same, all—yet to day I lay face downward in the beanfields, and if lifted my head I could not see the young wheat to tears.
